Over time, new places have been added, but the "old" have remained as well. A good example is in the heart of Nashville. Here, several vintage buildings have been gathered, including the town's original two-story log jail, an 1844 cabin, a turn-of-the-century doctor's office, and an 1820's blacksmith shop. Fine arts and handicrafts of all kinds continue to be a strong draw for visitors to Brown County. In particular, the village of Nashville is especially well-known for its large concentration of art and craft galleries and specialty shops. Additionally, there are numerous other shops and studios throughout the county. Most of the shops are open all year long, and the vast majority are open daily.

Brown County is a unique area of South Central Indiana. The area is rich in history, tales and truth plus a heritage full of artistic excellence. For more information about Brown County, visit www.browncounty.com/history.html.
